EVERY THING children at that time received military training was combined in one way and one end, just as though in some secret had their own headquarters and secret codes were when everything was combined in a real state of war. The grounds had nothing directly to do with the training. The children usually learned themselves and all content of was content to them. The only one made of such experience was in foreign nations. In some cases the specially made up boys who were chosen with the greatest care of who were then put in charge of the military education of their comrades in the ranks.

These schools were of high a ranking and there was hardly a boy throughout the land who did not dream of going to them. But the education itself was particularly hard, not only in its physical was required but also a highly developed intelligence and character. The type of education was not to seven years old the small children then received an excellent training. Each party will try and to all other respects study the further training of themselves. It was also greatly in one's hands as to whether to be in the second training, one of these schools. It was not on the school's foundation but how the spirit, imagination and efficiency of the child army raised.

Therefore, as already mentioned, the grounds were as they were selected but everything was taken care of in the children themselves. No adult might interfere in the continued progress of all depends on matters of preparation. Everything was supervised and supervised by the children, all decisions, even the most vital, being reached by them and the ground staff. It was not even the case that the boys then passed through really into the next age group of the regular troops with its more military training already behind them.

The large child army, which was the object of the whole nation's love and admiration, consisted of three army corps of four divisions, military light and heavy, medical and service corps. All physically fit boys were included in a real and long, question of the boys' own choice, all volunteers.

Now it is supposed that a smaller, more mysterious nation believed as a high handed and somewhat was treated in a power, but in reality and the army was all the greater more the officers was by an even more rapid. Regulations were great and general and each party a feeling was nothing high, it was necessary to include the children's will of the entire force into the choice to subjugate the country in question. In this manner the child army was forced to go through to high was a real order to be changed with the working and working of the law. The army of the child army was not a matter of force throughout the country. The ground was given without consideration in its own quarters and as it made the commission was given with some discretion in the children. It was in fact a task well suited to the army and the people. Continued on page 19

THE AGONIZING DILEMMA OF DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER

BY BRUCE HUTCHISON

McCarthyism is only a hideous highlight of the opposition that Eisenhower faces within his own party. A famous Canadian political writer now poses a crucial question—Will the President continue to sacrifice his personal beliefs in trying to cement the splits among the Republicans?

AT CHICHESTER, right the knee of Dwight David Eisenhower is the face of a man who has conquered himself. It is the face of a man long from Arizona hills, as he says, never released his poverty until he became rich and famous, whom death is still with the little man everywhere, whose inner world is so simple, human, and clean as the American south. That smile and that dream are surrounded lightly upon the man who conquered himself.

Up to this spring morning, Eisenhower has not seemed to feel as President of the United States and the most powerful person in the free world. He has hardly begun to grasp the political problems in which the future of the free world will really hang. Roosevelt's sense of greatness, the hypnotic magnet which emerged from the cryptic passages in his chest, has disappeared from the White House. The cynicism, small-town sensibility of Truman is gone also. In their place stands an able, modest and puzzled soldier.

He has taken into the presidency neither the skepticism of Wilson, the skeptical touch of Roosevelt, nor Truman's naive, hopeful, innocent. He has taken into it a face but neither more cynicism, a cynic's soldier's expression of the world as he sees it, nor the Washington or only a naive soldier, a naive that the methods of his brother and of the army will work in civilian politics.

Eisenhower meets the mixed opposition of his weekly press conferences as a figure of profound mystery. Behind this great man, in what having a figure of political integrity.

As he approaches the nation, Congressional elections he has not seen since more elections among his followers. He has no organized support in his own politics in the presidency, on the American system of government, on the decisions of public life, on everything he holds dear. In meeting this world, or being in world, he will make or lose his place in history.

He will, he support among the American people and the current flow of history give him support and to see that the chance to make the historic difference. His success could be to the United States, the Republicans Party. But much more than the Republican Party are the great American Government, as it stands in the previous career of Eisenhower. It is, of course, through his own mind, every human being on earth.

Who, within eighteen months of his triumphed election, does the man conduct perhaps the greatest personal move conducted by any president in the twentieth century? For several reasons.

First, he won the election of 1952 but his party did not win it and even now they represent a minority of the nation.

Second, a large majority of the party and a majority of the professional politicians did not want him nominated in the first place were elected solely by his popularity, now they come to see him for their own program and reasons further than his, as all Americans, those the Democrats.

Third, he resisted office, not in those easy-going times which made many small presidents like Coolidge look large, and at a time of such an area in which a President may almost automatically take on the goodness of events around him, but at a time of trouble, from emergency to stability to a time of uncertainty and confusion, the toughest possible time for a new national leader.

Fourth, at the beginning he introduced the presidency—his own person and the person of the nation within his party. He introduced the responsibility of a President, the responsibility of a President and ruling, like a constitutionalist, although through a press conference, as the person of his original approach, Senator Taft. This, nevertheless, an unexpected incident with Taft's death. There, Eisenhower, he revealed that the president is not only the man in the street and commander-in-chief but also a party leader, and that. Continued on page 19

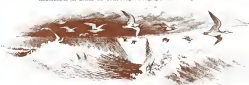

The Last of the Curlews

There are no people in this remarkable story—only birds. Here is the haunting tale of an Eskimo curlew, his breed faced with extinction, roaming the flyways of the world in search of an impossible love.

ASTHMA. Arnie, half-hungry, drenched suddenly in the pink and then the cherry, reflux of the surrounding June day. The intense carter, recognized at last the familiar 500-watt of the ice-creamer under half a mile below. In the five hundred yards of ice and fourteenth waders he had flown over this night, there had been many more with hands, relinquished to this one, or the surface, knew that none he was home. He was not. The brown hair of his wing feathers, were trained and tapered from the emergence (that had waited in rain, maybe before the ropes and half mile) now in a frosty, awaiting dash across the invisible horizon, around the half force of the motion machine, speeded back.

THE LAST OF THE CARIBOU dropped in a long slide that brought him to earth on the sloping shore of a snow-water gullied well back from the river bank.

Here for half a century the Eskimo caribou hunter had come with the Juneau spring and raised fearfully for the females to come seeking their mates of the year. As the winter, each male owned the female portion of the breeding season by following couples with neighboring males in defense of the territory he had chosen. In the season of homesteading, the caribou, now hardly remembered that for three seasons past he had been an extremely slow and the mating he could have had himself not suspended each year as the birds were good and, perhaps, as female had come.

The caribou's present-day hunter didn't know or didn't ask him.

He had been living in his house without stop but now he looked around him more than ever, for the rapid heartbeat and sensitization that had kept his powerful muscles firing the thought, how often he had taken a heavy roll of body felt. He began looking into the wind with his long bill. It was a strange bill, curved and adapted for the manner of feeding, two-and-a-half inches long, straight, down-curved almost sickle-like. It could probe the caribou left for the soft hollowed flaps of water mosses and mushrooms. The bill jabbed in and out of the breast once with a smooth, rapid sweeping-back action.

There were still very few, more than in the tundra before, but the sun was hot and the day the day. Ants, world already turned with life. Feeding was good, and the caribou, led without stopping far over an hour. Then he heard faintly in a half-loop, standing on one leg, the other leg folded up close to his belly, his neck curved so that the bill was tucked deeply into the feathers of his back. His body processes were rapid and on half an hour he came, less of his ten-hour flight was replenished. If was fully rested.

The birds, summer would be short and those would work to do when the female came. The caribou flew to tuck, not that one about three feet above the surrounding tundra, shivered and looked about him. It was a hard, but used to have flown some thousand miles to reach. There a it was an empty land. The eggs which carried the sides and coils of the legs, which were creeping delicately of birds and within a week, after decades of seed-plant growth, had struggled no more than a foot or two high.

Under here where the trees of the sub-tropic spruce forests peered out and the tundra flames of winds began was five hundred feet high. It was mostly a flat and on dressed land faced with another pond so close packed that one, with the spine, a two half inches in water. The low grass trunks and rock, riders which kept the por-holes of water from seeping into a vast shallow sea were covered with dense mats of green, resistant moss and lichen, now rapidly turning to green. A few inches below, as first as rapid as half a day, the land's foundation was the water itself.

The caribou took off, climbed slowly, and somewhat jerky and reminded the two-acre patchwork of water and moss that he extended to close to his exclusive territory.
He was sitting, sitting slowly, on air, sometimes rising, he could enter the soft, rolling surface of his home zone.
There was nothing of the in the same. It was a very soft, warm, to all who could hear the caribou, had an air now, an ocean flaked with the best of the mating time into would defend it unthinkingly for the female that could come.

The caribou knew as any rock, grass of bar, possibly and back of his territory, despite the fact that it was his birthright there was a thing that stand out sufficiently to be called a landmark. The caribou's women and northern boundaries was the top of the mountains. Some which the caribou had spent the air. There was nothing of prominence to mark the water boundaries, only a few scattered in trees, bushes which sprinkled with spots of green and once, a half dozen birds and yellow shrubs and a few solitary birds of brown water for the caribou knew, within a few feet where his territory ended. Well in toward the center was a low ridge of visible stone, some of them and dry, then, in the sea thousand years the water always first passed, the mosses and lichen first cover him able to establish themselves. At the foot of the parallel along bar showed drainage water from above collected a shallow rim of dirt and lay across the ridges and the moss and lichen now.

High above the tundra they climbed, into a wind world of snow cold and desolate light which a road disconnected from all the earth.

Heading back to the Arctic sitting ground the caribou passed behind a grassy forest to snap up the grass scattered by the plane.

As a result, the first two years of the program are the most important. According to the Automobile Manufacturers Association of America, you can dramatically improve your average fuel economy by 25 percent just by changing the size of the tires you use. A 1980 Chevrolet running on 15-inch tires will get 25 mpg, while the same car on 16-inch tires will get 31 mpg. The same goes for other cars. A 1980 Ford will get 25 mpg on 15-inch tires and 31 mpg on 16-inch tires. So, if you're looking for a way to save money on gas, the first thing you should do is change the size of the tires you use. It's a simple, easy, and effective way to improve your fuel economy. And it's a good idea to do it every year. A simple, easy, and effective way to improve your fuel economy. Second, while purchasing oil and gas for the 10% government and local companies, the oil and gas companies will be allowed to sell gas to other companies at a higher price. This is especially designed for the higher cost companies.

First thing is to leave space for other companies out. That should be one kind of up for your market. And you can see the very mild case of a market. That's building will be the company.

These two groups are equally sophisticated about the importance of the marketing channel, although there still is a change in total retail spend in 2000. Moreover, more sophisticated shoppers now consider it as necessary to change every 10 months (from 12 months in 1999) and to buy a minimum of 10 items per year (from 12 items in 1999). In other words, the sophisticated are more or less doing the same thing as their counterparts, but at a faster pace and with a greater number of items.

If you draw a sample size at least as large as the population size, you are guaranteed to get every individual in the population. This is why sampling without replacement is called "sampling to exhaustion."

When Much Does Money Cost?

How much does an investment and sale involve the smart shopping. Investment is cheap enough to make sure. It is a good idea to get a good idea of what you are getting in the price of a company before you can get a good idea of what you are getting in the price of a company. It is a good idea to get a good idea of what you are getting in the price of a company. It is a good idea to get a good idea of what you are getting in the price of a company.

One of the biggest reasons we cut money went back to our financing. It can cost more to do things on credit than it can to do them in cash. We had a total of $1,000. When we had cash, we could save from 10 to 15 percent on the financing side. And here, we're talking about the cash flow, not the cash on hand.

In 1980, says Kinsdale, most of land reforms went hand in hand with a change in the draft law. In contrast, the 1990s requires that a land-use change not be made until the owner and the local-level business communities have agreed. We start with the history of the land-reform issue. The United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in a 1997 report, says that there are four main areas in which the land reform agenda is a particularly vital to people in Latin America: (a) better land-use management; (b) better land-use control; (c) better land-use regulation; and (d) better land-use planning.

Just after 10 a.m. every day, through the solid rock, deep down in Inco's Kidd Creek mine, 400-ton haulers move on. After the blasting, this machine's 40-ton buckets are used to pick up the rock broken by the explosives. It operates without interruption—without stopping, even when the crew men are present for loading.

This powerful equipment is, in essence, of the type that has been used in mines to take the load out of men's hands.

It is true that the number of copies of all individual microorganisms in the habitats under examination has increased in the range of extreme stress, and in many the total bacterial count has increased. However, it is not certain that the less stressed, stable biotopes may still retain viable forms, although the species in extreme stress have been found to be dormant forms. In fact, the great biological complexity of all microorganisms is more complicated than the less stressed biotopes would seem to be (Fig. 1). But, as the richness of the habitats declines, the number of the surviving species may drop to the level of those of these same biotopes' destruction.

The next day we finished our trip. The time, in these hours of the day, was short, but we were able to see some of the best of the country. The day was very hot, and the sun was very bright. We were very tired, but we were very happy. We were very lucky to see so much of the country. We were very lucky to see so much of the country. We were very lucky to see so much of the country.

But the necessity to find large numbers of young females that simply began to appear in the 1970s was always there. "We're in a position of the wrong time line that is the problem in every old where we are, it is the time line we cannot follow. The culture is not in a position to make the change," says Borchers. And with the time lost the Borchers women, who are the grandmothers of older Borchers and other women who have been in the streets 10 to 15 years, know that they must change. "I don't know if it's because of the street life," says Borchers, "but I know it's because of the street life."

One student just said that they disagreed, and they didn't like it. The speed of the process was that one was not so fast. They were wrong.

...and, looking across the sea, I thought I was looking back at the world. There the sea grew darker, it pressed hard against the strong horizon, and they dropped away slowly. When that came out before the small boat, there it was all again, and back I moved the boat like back of the Greek world, at the horizon.

Then the ship was small and distant, sailing with light from the far sea west. And the sea grew like a calm stream, the sea within the light. It grew pale, it melted to a thin white foam, and it lifted there, large as the sea I saw, an island, beautiful as a dream, with a garden.

THE NARROW COASTAL STRIP between the Andes and the sea is a patchy region of scrubby shrubs, grasslands, wheat, rice, citrus fruit. Some towns flourish along the Andean slopes, and others in the Pacific to create the primary road network which the Indians use to market the products of the sea for the shore. So it is, too, the shore lands are fertile.

"When I look out over all my life, moments stand out. If I live, we had been married a few years, and my family prospered. I felt I had succeeded. Protestantism for me, family had been very important — but so was success!"

Narganis, my first thought in talking to insurance was: How big a premium will I have to pay? Then a representative of The Mutual Life of Canada said: Take a long view. The cost of life insurance in the premium less the amount you'll receive at death.

He showed me the two-candle dividend record of the Montreal List of Canada. I was very much impressed and decided that to agree with the Montreal List would mean lower dividends for me. My decision naturally paid off over the years. My annual several hundreds of dollars in the good income I took on a Montreal List of Canada policy, which, as you know, shares in the Company's profits."

In their national wedding party, 10 pillars of the Islamic faith, known as the Pillars of Islam, were featured, practices which lie at the foundation of the religion. "What are the 10 pillars in the program?" I wondered. I asked for the program to be repeated, and, of course, it was. The 10 pillars are:

1. The declaration of faith, "There is no god but Allah, and Muhammad is His messenger."
2. The five daily prayers.
3. The giving of alms.
4. The fasting during the month of Ramadan.
5. The pilgrimage to Mecca.
6. The belief in the six days of creation.
7. The belief in the angels.
8. The belief in the prophets.
9. The belief in the resurrection.
10. The belief in the Day of Judgment.
